Blood is thicker than water, or so they say. And best friends are true to the end, or so they say. Welcome to a world in which four cool, contemporary African-American men will find themselves in all kinds of trouble because "the rules" aren't what they used to be.

The Gordon brothers, CHARLES and JAMES, couldn't be more different if they were born to separate families. These two sexy, successful men could top any "most eligible bachelors" list. But the similarities may end there. A DIFFERENT WORLD's KADEEM HARDISSON stars as Charles, a successful young doctor who needs to learn how to incorporate work and play a little bit better in his life. Younger brother, James, on the other hand, knows very well how to play. A lover of the ladies — and vice versa — he knows how to get under Charles's skin and usually ends up interrupting Charles's well-ordered world. Opposites, in the case of these two strong-willed brothers, do not necessarily attract.

And taking sides in every issue are their best friends from college: A local TV weatherman (an Al Roker wanna-be) with an appropriately rugged stage name, "DUSTY CANYON," who lives vicariously through the brothers; and longtime friend MITCHELL (IN LIVING COLOR's TOMMY DAVIDSON), a bitter, divorced guy trying to pay off alimony to two ex-wives.

The one thing all four guys can agree on is their love of women, and they get their fill at a nearby micro brewery that is run by TERI, the only woman who is off limits to everyone. As can be expected, Teri loves/hates these guys and is always standing ready to set them straight. Her work will never be done....
